CITY HISTORY

Steeped in a rich and colorful history, Indian Wells has long been a source of prosperity for its inhabitants. In 1823, a Mexican explorer, Captain Jose Romero, gave Indian Wells its name upon discovering a thriving Cahuilla (Ka-wee-yah) Indian village formed around a hand-built well. The women of this tribe dug 30 feet ~ by hand ~ to find the water that enabled the growth of the community. For nearly 40 years, Indian Wells was the Coachella Valley's only established watering point and a pivotal stagecoach stop for intrepid gold prospectors seeking their fortunes on the Colorado River. The first settlers, including Caleb Cook, arrived around 1910 and were credited with pioneering the valley's date industry.

In the 1950's, savvy residents, led by E.M. Peterson, transformed their prosperous agricultural community into a premier residential and resort destination. That golden era began in 1957 with the construction of the Eldorado Country Club and Golf Course, followed by the Indian Wells Country Club and Golf Course, with Desi Arnaz as one of the founders. In 1958, Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz also opened the Indian Wells Hotel (now the Indian Wells Resort Hotel) and Indian Wells grew into an intimate, celebrity-studded retreat. When President Dwight D. Eisenhower first vacationed here, he was so impressed with Indian Wells that it became his winter residence.

In 1960, Arnold Palmer won the first Bob Hope Desert Classic at the Indian Wells Country Club, which was the start of Indian Wells' legacy as a top-ranked golf destination.

In the late 1970's, City officials and residents envisioned Indian Wells' future designation as a residential resort and the Coachella Valley's luxury leader. The City developed an innovative plan for growth by investing in land to develop a municipal golf course that would attract premium resorts. Tennis pro Charlie Pasarell understood this vision. He decided to move his Pilot Pen tennis tournament to Indian Wells and build the Hyatt Grand Champions Resort. The tournament outgrew the facility, moving to its permanent home, the Indian Wells Tennis Garden, in 2000. The prestigious tournament was renamed the Pacific Life Open in 2002 and then BNP Paribas Open in 2009. As proud host of the fifth largest masters series in the world, Indian Wells has firmly established its association with championship tennis.

What was once a flourishing tribal well and wagon stop has since become a prosperous wellspring of luxury, synonymous with fine living and world-class events. Our arrowhead symbol represents our proud heritage, the ingenuity of our people, and the promise of an exceptional experience.

UNRIVALLED TENNIS

Indian Wells featured one of the first tennis courts in the Coachella Valley and has been hosting tennis tournaments since the 1950's. But the City's tennis legacy was forged when tennis pro Charlie Pasarell moved his Pilot Pen tournament to Indian Wells and built the Hyatt Grand Champions Resort with a tennis stadium on site. The tournament outgrew the facility and moved to its permanent home, the Indian Wells Tennis Garden, in 2000. The tournament was renamed the Pacific Life Open in 2002 and BNP Paribas Open in 2009.

The Indian Wells Tennis Garden is the second largest tennis stadium in the world with 189 acres of landscaped grounds, which surround a 16,100-seat stadium with 44 luxury suites, press and broadcast skyboxes, player locker rooms, fitness facilities and several dining areas. The facility has 20 world-class tennis courts, two Har-Tru clay courts, eight acres of outdoor exposition space and two more stadiums with seating capacity for 8,000, as well as Tennis Club memberships and an onsite and online Pro Shop.

Indian Wells is home of the BNP Paribas Open recognized as the largest attended event next to the Grand Slams and ranked along with Wimbledon, the Australian Open, the French Open and the U.S. Open. Each spring, thousands of tennis fans gather to watch championship players ~ Roger Federer, Rafael Nadal, Maria Sharapova, Andy Roddick and more ~ vying for top titles during two weeks of gripping competition.
